Quoting from wikipedia Red Junglefowl

Males make a food-related display called “tidbitting”, performed upon finding food in the presence of a female.[7] The display is composed of coaxing, cluck-like calls and eye-catching bobbing and twitching motions of the head and neck. During the performance, the male repeatedly picks up and drops the food item with his beak. The display usually ends when the hen takes the food item either from the ground or directly from the male's beak and is associated with copulations and more offspring.[8] Males that [produce anti-predator alarm calls[9] appear to be preferred by females.[10

They are omnivorous and feed on insects, seeds and fruits including those that are [cultivated such as those of the oil palm.[11

Red junglefowl regularly bathe in dust to keep just the right balance in their [plumage.The dust absorbs extra oil and subsequently falls off.[12

Flight in these birds is almost purely confined to reaching their roosting areas at sunset in trees or any other high and relatively safe places free from ground predators, and for .escape from immediate danger through the day
